EMMA PLANK

Ten years after retiring and three years since in an impressive playground for children hospitalized here was dedicated in her name, Emma Plank looks to the future with the same gusto and gutsiness that characterized her illustrious 17-year career with Cleveland Metropolitan General Hospital.

A charming woman, Plank joined City Hospital — Metro General's forerunner — in 1955 to start the first formal, university-affiliated child life and education program in the United States. As an assistant professor of child development with Western Reserve University (WRU), Plank worked closely with the Department of Pediatrics and its director, Dr. Frederick Robbins.

It was Dr. Robbins, who later became dean of the WRU Medical School, who persuaded Plank to expand her talents at City Hospital by organizing a program in which her graduate students could work closely with 15 pre-school tuberculosis patients. In essence, a nursery school was set up for these youngsters.

"Dr. Robbins felt it was inhuman to keep children in the hospital month after month without providing them with something to do," Plank recalled. Thanks to a two-year, $15,000 grant from the Cleveland Foundation in the spring of 1955, young TB patients were soon being furnished with the special care that most medical personnel do not have the time to provide. By summer, the educating, interacting, playing — the healing-by-loving — being offered by Plank, schoolteacher Wilma Rice and the other child life staff members were being spread to the children with polio and respiratory difficulties.

Child life and education, now a profession recognized nationwide, had begun.

Above, Emma Plank works with a child as part of a babysitting service formerly provided in the Playcorner. Below, 10 years later, Plank ponders a question about her future.
